

Climate warning raises long-term flood fears

Contributed by Guardian
Thursday, 30 August 2007

Scientists have urged the government to consider the full impact of global warming when drawing up plans to protect Britain from flooding. A study from the Met Office's Hadley Centre predicts that river levels will rise higher than anticipated because existing computer models do not take into account the effects of climate change on plant life.
<http://www.guardian.co.uk/environment/2007/aug/30/weather.flooding>